

Terrell County Memorial Museum News
November, 2013 Sanderson, Texas

Tex Mooney... ★ Movie Star ★

Photo courtesy of the Saturday Evening Post

The massive Tex Mooney, aka O. T. Schupbach, Jr., of Sanderson, at 6 feet, 5 1/2 inches and 300 pounds, gives the “bum’s rush” to an unruly night club patron. Tex made his way to Hollywood after college and pro football to be a movie actor, but paid the bills as a night club bouncer.

Sometimes the tales out of Terrell County are the “stuff dreams are made of.” How many times do we dismiss a youngster’s wild dream of playing pro football or acting in the movies as just an unrealistic, childish flight of fancy? Yet, Oran T. Schupbach, Jr., from little ol’ Sanderson, Texas, did both of those things.

Always big for his age, Oran, son of O.T. “Pard” Schupbach, Sr., was raised on a ranch in southwestern Terrell County. That he grew quickly is very evident in a photo taken of Mrs. Clyde Mills’ music students preparing for a recital in 1926, when Oran was just nine years old. He already looked like a grown man! Other early photos show him standing, not just head and shoulders, but head and chest above his peers!

Oran’s father, Pard, came to Terrell County from Del Rio in 1899. He was born in Sonora, Texas, and his father had owned ranches in the Sonora and Del Rio areas. Pard’s father also set up a sheep ranch at Sheffield, and Pard and his brother Monk and three other brothers brought a flock of sheep to the Sanderson area in the early 1900s, finally settling on free range at Bone Watering on the Rio Grande. After two or three years, they moved on west to the San Francisco Creek and established a ranch on what is now the Slaughter.

Then, Pard took up land in the Lonesome Valley area southwest of Sanderson, and by 1909 had established a ranch there.

In 1910 he married Dixie Bowden in Alpine. Daughter Maybelle was born in 1915, and Oran T., Jr., came along in 1917, born at his grandmother's house in El Paso. After a short recuperation, the Schupbachs brought their new son home to the ranch. As they say, Oran wasn't born in Sanderson, but he got here as soon as he could.

Raised as a typical rancher's son, Oran learned how to take care of animals and do his chores, but his dream was professional sports. He went to high school in both Sanderson and Abilene, a stand-out in football and basketball, and graduated from Sanderson High School in 1936.

He attended Sul Ross State College and transferred during his junior year to West Texas State, where he was a member of the so-called "World's Tallest Basketball Team," and was a stand-out on the football team.

In 1941, his senior year, the Buffaloes won the Alamo Conference and Oran's skill and hard work won him a place on the all-conference team.

Oran's high school and collegiate record and skill, plus his size and weight, landed him a position with the Cleveland Rams team for 1942-43. He played one season for them, then moved on to the Brooklyn Dodgers for the '43-'44 season.

Meanwhile, someone put the acting bug into his head and he went to Hollywood in 1943. He changed his name to Tex

Oran grew quickly and by 3rd or 4th grade was much taller than his peers. A natural at sports, he competed in football, track and, of course, basketball. The sports skills he learned stood him well in his collegiate and professional sports days. Above is his high school team, ca 1934-5.

Mooney and tried out for and won a bit role in a movie, 1944's Girl Rush. It was a tiny part playing an uncredited role as a henchman in a gang, but it earned him screen time and he did have lines to say.

Oran found the movie business was a lot easier on the body than smashing heads together on the football field, so he gave up his football career to be a movie star.

His career looked promising, and for the next four years the roles came, but he never achieved star status. His roles included:

- 1945, Sing Your Way Home - Dancer (uncredited)
- 1946, From This Day Forward - Bouncer (uncredited)

Photo courtesy IMDB.com

Photo courtesy of the Saturday Evening Post

Tex gives a patron the “belly-bump,” a bouncer technique that could send a miscreant across the floor and flat on his back. Usually, Tex’s size, weight and demeanor alone kept patrons in line.

- 1947, Calendar Girl - Swedish Tug-of-War Man (uncredited)

In 1948, he finally got his first, credited role in the Johnny Weissmuller vehicle, Jungle Jim, where he chewed the scenery as Chief Devil Doctor, in blackface and white paint, no less.

When his mom, Dixie, passed away suddenly in 1945, Pard came to California to stay with Tex for a time, but it didn’t last long. He soon grew tired of the fast-paced life and longed for the desert environs of West Texas. Tex put him on the train and sent him back to Sanderson.

Then, the movie work dried up and Tex was forced to find work elsewhere. He had worked part-time as a bouncer to make ends meet, so it seemed to make good sense to pursue that career. He soon landed a full-time job as a bouncer in a Hollywood night club, and it became the easiest role of his life.

Tex found that his immense size and weight put “the fear of God” in all but the most fool-hardy of night club patrons. Just his presence alone on the dance floor kept the peace, and when he had to deal with a problem, he developed techniques that stopped the trouble before it could begin. He found that he could move quickly to an offending patron and send him sprawling to the floor with a forceful “belly-bump.” Dazed, and with the wind knocked out of him, the unruly troublemaker was neutralized and could be dealt with easily and quickly.

In another bouncer technique, the legendary “bum’s rush,” Tex would grab the miscreant by the collar and the seat of the pants, lift him from the floor and carry him to the exit, as portrayed in the lead photo on page one. His upper body strength must have been extraordinary.

In a Saturday Evening Post article on the bouncer trade, written in 1948, Tex Mooney was named as the author’s favorite bouncer, and the first six paragraphs were dedicated to his views and anecdotes on the life of a bouncer.

In the article, Tex bemoaned the fact that times were changing for the bouncer. He related that the bouncer was forced to use psychological tricks rather than physical persuasion in the new, post-war world.

He reminisced that one of his toughest episodes involved four Canadian sailors and a girl they had picked up on the street.

Tex’s night club had a rule forbidding entrance to women wearing slacks. Of course the young lady in question was wearing slacks.

When informed at the front door of the club policy, the young lady said, “That’s no problem,” and proceeded to strip the slacks off, right on the street, and tossed them to one of her companions, who promptly stuffed them into his hat, and the party pushed their way into the club.

At this point, Tex had to intervene. As he put it, “The dame’s wearing a long coat, but every step she’s taking she’s showing a lot of acreage. About twenty sailors beat me to her, and when I first eased up, it was kind of a tedious spot. I had to read off four sailors before I could talk to her private. When the cops took her away, the sailors got all upset so then we had to oblige them. Nothing rough, because they were our allies. But enough to let 'em know who was runnin' this joint."

Photo courtesy The H-SU Brand

In 1954, Tex won another movie role, this time in the epic East of Eden, starring James Dean. He had a small role as a bartender, but it did not earn him a place in the end credits. The movie came out in 1955, and was his last role.

On May 19, 1956, O. T. "Tex Mooney" Schupbach died suddenly of undisclosed causes in Riverside, California. He was only 39 years old.

Most people only dream about their life goals, being forced back to reality by lack of opportunity and practicality. Tex Mooney, through talent, skill, the right physical attributes and providence, realized his childhood dreams. Even though he did not achieve sports hero or matinee idol status, nevertheless, he had modest success and lived the life he wanted, on his own terms. In his short life, he achieved what others only dream of, and it all started in this West Texas town we call home.

References

- "Terrell County, Its Past, Its People", Alice Evans Downie. Sanderson, Texas: Terrell Co. Heritage Commission, 1978.
- California Death Index (1940-1997,) retrieved from www.familysearch.org, 7-25-13
- "Want to Get Thrown Out of Here?" Saturday Evening Post, 12-4-1948, retrieved from Ebsco.com, 8-19-13
- "Tex Mooney," retrieved from www.imdb.com/name/nm0600775/?, 7-25-13
- Tex Mooney Player Bio | Yearly Stats retrieved from <http://databasefootball.com> 8-21-13
- "Tallest Cage Squad" to battle Mustangs, Borger Daily Herald, 11-28-40, retrieved from <http://texashistory.unt.edu/>, 7-29-13
- "Cowboys rollover WT Buffaloes," The H-SU Brand, 11-9-40, retrieved from <http://texashistory.unt.edu/>, 7-29-13
- "Football at SR," The Optimist (Abilene, Tex.), 9-28-39, retrieved from <http://texashistory.unt.edu/>, 7-29-13
- "Tex Mooney, the big guy with the Dodgers," (Oswego WI) Palladium Times 9-3-43, retrieved from <http://texashistory.unt.edu/>, 7-29-13
- "Newcomers Look Good at Abilene High," Abilene Daily Reporter, 12-12-34, retrieved from <http://texashistory.unt.edu/>, 7-29-13